chronology of the Khalifs), is perhaps the most interesting of all, as it contains much useful information upon the history of the Arabs both in the East and West. The second chapter, especially, which is exclusively consecrated to the history of Spain, although rather concise, is in my opinion invaluable. I shall have occasion to quote from it in the course of these notes.

The MSS. in the Bodleian containing parts of this work, which in its original state could not be composed of much less than ten folio volumes, are Laud. 292, Marsh. 59, 320, and 321. Many of these copies, however, being only repetitions of the same volume, the work is incomplete.

The life of Abú 'Amer Ahmed Ibn 'Abdi-r-rabbihi may be read in the Mattmahu-l-anfus, by Al-fat'h, (Ar. MS. in the Brit. Mus., No. 9580, fo. 142, verso,) as well as in the Jadhwatu-l-muktabis, by Al-homaydī, (Ar. MS. in the Bodl. Lib., Hunt, No. 464, fo. 43.) The last-mentioned writer states that he saw in Cordova a copy of Ibn 'Abdi-r-rabbihi's work divided into twenty books, and written by the author himself for the use of the Amir, Al-hakem, son of 'Abdu-r-rahmán III. This agrees very well with what Conde (Hist. de la Dom. vol. i. p. 425) says, no doubt borrowed from the same source; but how to reconcile the titles of the above books with those given by the Spanish translator I am at a loss to determine, being as follows: 'the sky, the stars, the first dawn of day, day, night, the bower, the cloud, love, repentance, the gazelle, &c.'

Abú Nasr Al-fat'h Ibn Mohammed Ibn 'Obeyd-illah Ibn Khákán Al-kaysí is well known as the author of a work entitled Kaláyidu-l-'ikiyán fí maháseni-l-a'yan (gold chains in the laudable actions of the illustrious), being a biography of Spanish poets who were his contemporaries, with extracts from their poems. The work is divided into four parts; the first comprising the Kings, the second the Wizírs, the third the Kádís and theologians, and the fourth the poets not belonging to either of the above classes. Ibn Khákán wrote another work, entitled Mattmahu-l-anfus wa maarahej-t-tánus fí mlīhī ahli-l-andalus, 'spot of recreation of the eyes and the field for familiarity on the witty sayings of the people of Andalus.' These two works in themselves have little or no historical value, being mostly extracts from the works of eminent poets who were his contemporaries, preceded by short biographical accounts of their authors. Even these are almost entirely destitute of such data as might throw light on the history of the times. The birth-place, profession, and age of the poet, are often omitted, and the generality of the articles contain nothing but the most impermeable praises of the authors to whom they were consecrated. As literary productions, however, the works are considered by the best Arabian critics to possess undeniable merit. They are written throughout in rhymed prose, strewed with metaphorical expressions, which make their perusal a matter of great labour and difficulty. As it is, they may be of great assistance to those who wish to gain a knowledge of the state of Arabian literature in Spain during the fifth century of the Hijra; although, if we are to believe the historian As-sadī, the merits of Ibn Khákán as a writer and a critic must be greatly reduced by the fact that his praises or his criticisms were often influenced by low motives: indeed, the above-mentioned historian, who wrote Ibn Khákán's life in his Al-waff fi-l-waffiydt (Arab. MS. in my possession), represents him as a man of immense talents and undisputed merit as a poet and a grammarian, but of dissipated life and low morals. He says that "when he had fixed upon the composition of the Kaláyid, he wrote to all the eminent poets, distinguished authors, and great men of his time, announcing to them his intention of writing a book, and begging them to send him some of their compositions; that all complied with his request, fearing his bad disposition, and sent along with them a present in money; by which means they ensured his praises. All those who did not openly bribe him he treated in the most severe manner."
Copies of the first of these two works are to be met with in almost every public library of any note in Europe. See Bib. Reg. Paris. Catal., No. 734; Bib. Bodl. Cat. by Uri and Nicoll, No. 706; Bib. Lugd. Bat., No. 1450; Bib. Esc., No. 436. A splendid copy, beautifully executed in a clear, large Eastern hand, having the titles written in gold upon blue ground, and formerly in the possession of Sale, the translator of the Korán, is now preserved in the Radcliffe Lib. at Oxford, K. 2-24. It was transcribed A. H. seven hundred and twenty-seven (A.D. 1327), by Mohammad Ibn Sálik. The Library of the British Museum possesses likewise a copy of this excellent work, in fo. (No. 9599), bound together with a commentary on the Makkárah of Ibn Házem. It is fairly executed in the Maghrebi character, and bears the date of Saturday, the sixth of Dhí-l-hajjah, A. H. one thousand one hundred and twenty-three (answering to the month of Feb. 1711). The name of the copyist is Ahmed Ibn Mohammed Al-warashán Al-makádi, an inhabitant of Fez. There are two more MSS. in the Brit. Mus., bearing also the title of Kaldýidu-l-ikiyán, one No. 7525 in quarto, the other No. 9580 in octavo; but although both are the work of Al-fa'th, their contents are quite different, as I have already remarked. (See Preface). The copy of this work which I have used in my quotations is one in my possession, written in the Maghrebi or Western hand, about the middle of the sixteenth century of our era. See ibid.

The life of Ibn Khákán occurs in most Arabian biographers of note; it is to be found in Ibn Khallekán (No. 536, Tgd. Ind.), in the Zohru-r-riyádk, in As-sadfi, and Abú-l-mahásen, Abú-I-íedá, An. Mst. vol. iii. p. 485, and Abú-l-faraj. See also Jones, De Poes. Asiat. p. 429. The first-mentioned writer makes him a native of Seville; but does not give the year of his birth.

Al-fa'th was put to death in Morocco at the beginning of five hundred and twenty-nine (Oct. A. D. 1134), or according to others in five hundred and thirty-five (A. D. 1147-8), by order of Abú-I-hasan 'Mí Ibn Yúsuf Ibn Táshfín, second Sultán of the Almorávides, to whose brcther, Abú Is'hak Ibráhim, he had dedicated his Kááyíd. Instead of Khassál, I found, when it was too late, that the name of that poet was to be written thus, Khissál. He was a famous grammarian and rhetorician, who flourished in the sixth century of the Hijra. His entire name was Dhú-l-wizaráteyn Abú 'Abdillah Mohammed Ibn Abí-l-khissál Al-gháfekí Al-jayyéní (of Jaen), so called because he was originally from Segura, a town in the neighbourhood, and belonged to the tribe of Gháfek. He left many works on various topics, some of which are preserved in the Library of the Escorial.

Treatings on this author, Casiri made two great mistakes. He says (see vol. ii. p. 163 of his Bib. Ar. Hisp. Esc.) “Eum originem traxisse a loco nomine Vescara dicitur;” (that he was originally from a place called Vescara.) I need not observe that there never was such a place in Spain; but Casiri thought that the letter ó formed part of the word, whereas it is a preposition annexed to the word Shekúrah, the town of his birth. He says also (see ibid. vol. ii. p. 335) that Ibn Abí-l-khissál flourished in the fifth century of the Hijra. This is an evident mistake: the historian Al-fa'th, who gave the life of that author in his Al-kaldýid (Ar. MS. in my possession), says that he was Wizír to one of the Almorávide Sultáns of Spain, and that he knew him in five hundred and fifteen of the Hijra (A. D. 1121-2). I further learn from Al-kodha'I (Ar. MS. in the Nat. Lib. Mad., Gg. 14) that Ibn Abí-l-khissál died in Cordova in five hundred and forty of the Hijra (A. D. 1114-5), a statement which I find also confirmed by Ibrun-l-abbár in his biographical dictionary of illustrious men (Ar. MS. in the Nat. Lib. Mad., Gg. 12).

The work here mentioned as being the composition of Ibn Abí-l-khissál—the Qasís Tarsilah—does not occur in Héjí Khalífah's Bibliographical Index. There are in the Library of the British Museum (see No. 9692) two short treatises by this writer; one, entitled ظلال الامامة و طرق الامامة في نفل الصيابة (the shadow of the cloud and the power of precedence on the excellences of the companions), is a short biography of the companions of the Prophet. The other is a poem entitled مراحل الیاقب ومنهاج الیاقب للحساب في نسب رسول الله (the ladders of ascension and open path-ways to the knowledge of the genealogy of the Prophet). Both are in the Esc. Lib., Nos. 404 and 1787.

41 The life of this poet occurs in Ibn-l-khattíb. His entire name was Abú-l-hasan Sahl Ibn Mohammed Ibn Malík. He was born at Granada in five hundred and fifty-nine (A.D. 1163-4), and distinguished himself by his verses. He died in that city in the month of Dhí-l-ka’dah, six hundred and thirty-nine (A.D. 1241). Abú-l-hasan exercised for some time the duties of preacher at the principal mosque of Granada, and made himself famous by his eloquent sermons.

42 Abú Bekr Mohammed Ibn 'Ammá Al-náhri Ash-shíból (of Silves) was, as his title Dhl-l-wizardejon sufficiently implies, the prime minister of Al-mu’atamed Ibn 'Abbád, King of Seville. He at first served his master faithfully and commanded his armies in several expeditions, taking Silves from Mohammed Ibn Sa’id, and fighting successfully against the Christians. Having afterwards lost the favour of his monarch, Ibn ‘Ammár fled the court and betook himself to Silves, where he revolted, and assumed the title of king. He however subsequently fell into the hands of Al-mu’atamed, by whose orders he was taken to Seville and beheaded in four hundred and seventy-seven (A.D. 1084). The life of Ibn ‘Ammár occurs in Ibn Khallekán (No. 680, Tyd. Ind.); in the Kalégyidu-l-l’ikyión, by Al-faţ’h; and in the Mattmahu-l-anfus, by the same (Arab. MS. in the Brit. Mus., No. 9580, fo. 92, verso, et seq.). See also Casiri, Bib. Ar. Hisp. Esc. vol. ii. p. 44, et seq., and Conde, Hist. de la Dom. vol. ii. pp. 34, 40, 50, 71, et passim, who calls him Muhamad Aben Omar Ben Husein, and places his death in four hundred and seventy-nine, no doubt by mistake.

43 The life of Abú-l-wálíd Ahmed Ibn ‘Abdillah Ibn Zeydún Al-makhzúmi occurs in Ibn Khallekán (Tyd. Ind., No. 56). The reader may also consult the learned memoir by M. Weyers, where the life of that celebrated poet is given, translated from the Kalégyid of Ibn Khákán, together with copious extracts from his poetical compositions. See also D’Herbelot, Bib. Or. voc. Zeidoun; Casiri, Bib. Ar. Hisp. Esc. vol. i. pp. 103, 106, et passim; and Conde, Hist. de la Dom. vol. i. p. 611. Al-faţ’, in his Mattmahu-l-anfus (Ar. MS. in the Brit. Mus., No. 9580, fo. 92, verso, et seq.), has also given the life of Ibn Zeydún, with numerous quotations from his poems. The most celebrated of Ibn Zeydún’s poetical compositions is a risâleh or epistle which he addressed to Walâdah, daughter of the Sultân Al-mustakfi-billah Mohammed, who ascended the throne of Cordova in four hundred and fourteen (A.D. 1023). It was translated into Latin by Reiske, and printed, Lipsiee, 1755, 4to., under this title, Abî-l-waydî Ibn Zeîdînî Epistola; it has since been reprinted by Hirtius in his Institutiones Linguæ Arabicae, Jena, 1770, in 8vo.

Instead of

instead of the second hemistich of the first verse, my copy reads which materially alters the meaning, thus, 'sleep fled from our wearied eyelids.'

Abû 'Omar Ahmed Ibn Mohammed Ibn Darrâj Al-kasttâli (from Cazalla, a town at thirty miles from Cordova,) was one of the poets of the court of Abû 'A'mir Al-mansûr. He was born, according to Ibn Khallekân (No. 55, Tyd. Ind.), in the month of Moharram, three hundred and forty-seven (Feb. or March, A. D. 958), and died in Jumâdâ II, four hundred and twenty-one (June or July, A.D. 1030). Al-homaydi, in his Jadd'antu-l-mustâbis, (Arab. MS. in the Bod. Lib., Hunt. 464, fo. 49, verso,) places his death a year sooner, "close upon four hundred and twenty." By referring to Ath-tha'âlebî, in his Yâtînâtu-d-dahrî, 'incomparable pearl of the times,' (Arab. MS. in the Brit. Mus., No. 9578,) I find that he actually compares him to Al-mutenâbî for the sweetness and cadence of his verses. See also Conde, Hist. de la Dom. vol. i. p. 522.

Abû-l-mansûr 'Abdu-l-malek Ibn Mohammed Ibn Isma'îl Ath-tha'âlebî An-nisâbûri left several works upon the lives of the Arabian poets and their writings; of which the principal is his Al-yâyitmu-d-dahrî fi maḥâsni ahli-l-âsri, 'the unique pearl of the age on the brilliant qualities of the people of this century,' copies of which are to be found in the Lib. of the Brit. Mus. (see No. 9578); in the Escurial Lib., Nos. 348-9; Bib. Lugd. Bat., Nos. 1691-92; Bib. Bodl., No. 805, and in most public libraries in Europe. The British Museum possesses besides two excellent works by this author which I have described elsewhere, (see Note 22, p. 331;) another, being a collection of apophthegms, has been lately translated and published (Vienna, 1829,) by Prof. Fluegel, who has given in a learned preface a list of the numerous works written by Ath-tha'âlebî.

The name of this poet is entirely unknown to me.
Abdu-l-málik Ibn Habíb is, no doubt, the same theologian already mentioned in Ash-shakandí’s epistle, p. 37, and whose life Casiri has given at p. 138, vol. ii. of his Bib. Ar. Hisp. Esc., as translated from Adh-dhobí. Al-makkari speaks of him in Book v. Part i. fo. 96, verso, where he gives the lives of the Andalusians who visited the East. In the number is that of Abdu-l-málik, who went to Mekka, where he remained a considerable time, profiting by the lessons of Málık Ibn Ana, and then returned to his native land, where he is said to have written no less than one thousand different works upon various topics, and to have been most instrumental in substituting the rite of his master for that of Al-auzá’ei, which was formerly practised. (See Conde, Hist. de la Dom. vol. i. p. 268.) Ibn Habíb died at Cordova in two hundred and thirty-eight (A. D. 853).

Abdu-l-málik was known by the surname of Ablí Merwán and the patronymic As-solami, because he belonged to the tribe of Solaym. Another Arab having the same name and surname, as well as the same patronymic, occurs in Casiri, Bib. Ar. Hisp. Esc. vol. ii. p. 107. He is said to have been a native of Huete, a town in the neighbourhood of Granada, and to have died at Cordova in two hundred and eighty-nine (A. D. 901-2). But I am strongly inclined to believe that this is a mistake of Casiri, who, by reading incorrectly the date of Ibn Habib's death, made two individuals of only one.

A volume, containing a history of the conquest of Spain by the Arabs, and some legal tracts, more or less connected with that subject, by 'Abdu-l-malik Ibn Habib, is preserved in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, No. cxxvii. (See Nicoll's Catalogue, fo. 119). I shall have occasion to refer to it in the course of these notes.

56 The entire name of this poet is Abú Mohammed 'Abdullah Ibn Mohammed Ibn Sárah or Sáreh Al-bekri Ash-shantareyni (of Santarem). His life occurs in Ibn Khallékán (No. 353 in Tyd. Ind.), in the Kaláyíd-i-l-'ikyán by Al-fat'h, and in the Mattmahu-l-anfús by the same writer, fo. 185. Casiri, (Bib. Ar. Hisp. Esc. vol. i. p. 105,) in transcribing the index of the poets whose lives are contained in Al-fat'h's work, wrote his name thus ٍ ٍ ابْن سَارَةٍ and made him a native of Valencia instead of Santarem. As I have not had it in my power to collate the original passage, I cannot tell whether Casiri committed a mistake or not, but I have no doubt that the copy he consulted read ابْن سَارَةٍ with a س for I find the name of this poet differently written in various MSS. My copy of the Kaláyíd reads ابْن سَارَةٍ Ibn Sárah; that of the Brit. Mus. (No. 7525, fo. 71, verso) ابْن سَمْر ابْن سَبْرَة Ibn Sabirah; the Mattmah, (ib. No. 9580, fo. 186,) ابْن سَارَةٍ I have followed the reading as above, not only as being the most probable, but because it is confirmed by Ibn Khallékán (see ib.), by Ibnu-l-abbár (Arab. MS. in the Nat. Lib. Mad., Gg. 113), and by my MS. of Ibnu-l-khattiéb, although I believe that ابْن سَارَةٍ or سارة, which was the name of this poet's mother, may be written both ways. Ibn Sárah died in five hundred and nineteen (A. D. 1125-6).

57 B. says that the infantry and cavalry together amounted to six hundred thousand.

58 Ambrosio Morales, in his Antig. de España, Alcalá de Henares, 1575, fo. 70, says that there was in his days a pass in the mountains close to Cordova, called la senda del rosal (the path of the rose-tree), owing to the innumerable rose-trees with which the sides of the mountain were planted.

A roba' (in Spanish arroba) is equivalent to five-and-twenty pounds weight. Roba', in Arabic رَجْع means the fourth part of any thing, and, as applied to weight, the fourth of a kintar (in Spanish quintal), which is a hundred weight.

61 This Abú Yahya must have held the government of Cordova only for a short time, since, according to the Karttás (see the Portug. transl. by Moura, p. 237), and Conde (Hist. de la Dom. vol. ii. p. 391), he was put to death in five hundred and eighty-two (A. D. 1186) by his brother's orders.

NOTES AND ILLUSTRATIONS.
The expression which I have translated, perhaps rather freely, by 'the scalded cat dreads the fire,' is لبلاخ الماس من حجر مرتين (the admonished does not bite twice of the same stone).

At-tífáshí, a patronymic derived from a city called تيفاش in Africa proper, and placed at one day's march from Temedint, on the road from Cairewan to the castle of Abú Tawl. Yákút, in his Geog. Dict. (Arab. MS. in the Bodl. Lib., No. 928), as well as Al-bekrí, loco laudato, fo. 48, verso, calls it تيفاشه الطالية Tífáshu-dh-dhílemah, which M. de Quatremère (Not. et Ext. vol. xii. p. 506) has translated by Tifusch l'injuste, but which I think might be rendered as well and more properly by 'Tífásh, that of the darkness.'

Ezija, or rather Estejah, from Astigi. The change of st into z is frequent in Spanish; so from Basta, Castulo, Sarakosta, Castalla, were made Baza, Cazlona, Zaragoza, Cazalla.

Bolkaina, which, pronounced as the Spanish Arabs did, will give Bulkone, is a corruption of Obulco or Obulcone, ο Βολκο of Strabo, the Municipium Pontifica of Pliny, now Porcuna, a city in the province of Cordova.

Gháfek was a castle in the jurisdiction of Cordova; it owed its foundation to the tribe of Gháfek, who built also in Africa a town of the same name. See Al-bekrí (Memlék wa-l-meslek, fo. 34). There is at present no town of this name in Spain, but I find in Idrisí, Yákút, and other geographers, that there once stood on the road from Cordova to Calatrava a large castle called Hisn Gháfek. The distances given by the former writer are as follow: from Cordova, in a northern direction, to Ariles eleven miles; to Dár Al-bakar six; to Petroches forty; to Gháfek seven; to Jebul 'Amir thirty. Gháfek must therefore have stood seven miles north from the present village of los Pedroches.

Estepa is written thus, استابة Astabah, which was its ancient name; Baena بیانا Buyenah; Lucena لسانه Lusénah, which I also find written sometimes thus, Al-yásénah. Casiri always read incorrectly the name of this city, which he at times wrote Eliossana, and at others Al-basena, telling us, however, that both were the names for Lucena among the Spanish Arabs! (Bib. Arab. Hisp. Ecd. vol. ii. pp. 95, 126, et passim.) Its Roman name was evidently Lucania, from Lucas, owing to the extensive forests in the neighbourhood. Al-kossyr (the small castle), is a diminutive from Al-kasser (in Spanish Alcazar), 'a castle.' It may be either the present town of Alcozer, fourteen miles south of Cordova, or the village of Alcazarejos in the same neighbourhood.

A’gharnáttah is for Gharndittah, since it is not an uncommon thing for the Arabs to add a hamza before the first letter of foreign words, especially when these begin with a harsh letter; for instance, from Κωπρες they made Abrísus, from Κάμια Ικίμιν, from Græcus Aghríkí, from Papel Iglishí, &c.

Much obscurity prevails as to the etymology of the word Granada. Casiri, in his translation of Ibnu-l-khattib (Bib. Ar. Hisp. Esc. vol. ii. p. 247), calls it a Phœnician colony, Peregrinorum Colonia, and says that such is the meaning of the word Gharndtah. But the Arabian historian translated by him says no such thing; Casiri misunderstood his words, which are: غرناطة اسم أعجبي مدينة كورة that is, Gharndtah is the foreign or barbarous name for the capital of the province or district of Elvira, which was also called (by the Arabs) Shāmu-l-andalus, the Damascus of Andalus.

The supposition that the city of Granada owes its name to the resemblance it bears to a ripe pomegranate (granatum), either in shape to the open halves of the fruit, or in the multitude of its houses lying close together like the seeds of that fruit, is scarcely admissible; for, supposing the comparison to be a just one as applied to that city in the times of its greatest splendour, it could by no means be so when speaking of a small town or castle, such as Granada is represented by all the Arabian writers before the fifth century of the Hijra. Nor is the conjecture given out by the antiquarian Pedraza (Hist. Ecclesiastica de Granada, Gran. 1638, fo. 21, et seq.) entitled to more credit, namely, that the city was so called from its being the spot where that fruit was first introduced from Africa; for I find in Ibnu-l-awam (see the Spanish translation by Banqueri, Mad. 1802, vol. i. fo. 273) that the pomegranate was originally brought from Syria to Spain during the reign of 'Abdu-r-rahmán I., who had it planted first in his gardens at Cordova (towards A. H. 160), and then distributed the seed all over Spain, and long before that time the above-mentioned city bore the same name as at present. The fact of the author himself stating that the word A'gharnáttah meant a pomegranate in the language of the Christians cannot, for several reasons, be considered as adding any weight to the opinion that the city of Granada received the name of the pomegranate either from its founders, whoever they may be, or from the Africans under Hábús, when that sovereign transferred to it the seat of his government: firstly, because, as I shall show hereafter, the ancient name for that city was not A'gharnáttah, nor Gharndtah, but Karndtah; secondly, because it is evident that Al-makkarí had no other authority for his statement than the words of some obscure writer, who caught at the resemblance between the two words—a thing, unluckily, of too frequent occurrence among his countrymen; and lastly, because, had any of the reasons above stated influenced the African settlers in choosing a name for their city, they would certainly have called it Román (the name of the pomegranate in Arabic,) and by no means A'gharnáttah from granatum. The same might be said of more ancient settlers.

Others incline to the belief that Karnáttah or Gharndtah is a Phœnician word. Conde, in his notes to the description of Spain by the geographer Idrísí, (Mad. 1799, p. 188,) thought it a compound of two Phœnician words, Ghór and ndtáth, meaning 'the cave of the mountain,' and the same opinion is entertained by Aldrete (Antig. de España y Africa, Amberes, 1614, p. 85) and other estimable antiquarians. Marineo Siculo (De las cosas memorables de España, fo. Alcalá, 1530, p. 150), and Echevarria (Paseos por Granada, p. 17) go still further, since they assert, without the least authority, that those words mean 'the cave of Nídáth,' from the name of a Goddess so called, whom the inhabitants used to worship in a subterranean temple.

Having disposed of my objections as to the origin assigned to its name, I shall now proceed to contradict the opinion of Marmol, and his followers Pedraza and Echevarria, who pretend that Granada was a foundation of the Arabs.

That a town called Karndtah existed before the Saracen invasion on the site now occupied by Granada cannot be doubted, for we are told by the Arabian writers that, before undertaking the conquest of Toledo, Tárik dispatched one of his lieutenants with a division of his army towards Malaga, Illiberis
(Elvira), and Karnáttah, which were speedily subdued. Ar-rázi, who wrote in the ninth century, in describing the territory round Elvira, says, "And in this district is the town of Karnáttah, called also the city of the Jews, because peopleed by them, and Karnáttah is the oldest town in all the district of Elvira." Ibnu-khattib, the celebrated Wizir and historian, who treated with so much learning on the antiquities of his native city, joins in the opinion entertained by Ar-rázi. That this Karnáttah was a very inconsiderable town in the times that preceded the invasion is, on the other hand, to be inferred from the fact that its name is nowhere mentioned, either by the Roman geographers, or in the national councils of the Goths. We are, therefore, justified in asserting that Karnáttah, as an old Roman town, stood not far from Elvira, Illiberis, previous to the Baracen invasion. See the Spanish translation of Rasis; Casiri, Bib. Ar. Hisp. Esc. vol. ii. p. 251; Conde, Hist. de la Dom. vol. i. pp. 37, 51; and Marmol, Reb. de los Moriscos, fo. 5, 6, et seq.

As to its being a Phoenician colony, it seems probable enough. From time immemorial that enterprising nation had made settlements on the southern coast of Spain, and the names of Cartama, Cartellia, Karchedone (Archidona), Cartajima, Cartaraqan, and others, beginning (like Karnáttah) with Kar or Karta, meaning a city in the Phoenician language, give plausibility to the conjecture. Besides, I have already stated that the name of that town is invariably written by ancient authors thus, كرناتة Karnáttah, and I may add to this that a city of the same name is placed by Idrísí (see the French transl., vol. i. pp. 202, 226, et passim), Ibn Khaldün, fo. 86-104, et passim, and Al-bekrí, (Arab. MS. in the Brit. Mus., No. 9577, p. 85, verso) in that part of Africa which faces the coast of Granada. Whether the word Karnáttah means the cave of the mountain or not I am unable to determine, as I am not of the number of those who believe that Phoenician words may be invariably interpreted by means of the Hebrew language; but think, on the contrary, that without a deep knowledge of the native dialects of Africa all etymological researches in that quarter must necessarily fail.

I ought to observe that Al-makkári being a mere compiler, and professing only to transcribe the narrative of historians of various ages and countries, it occurs frequently that the name of a town is spelt in three or four different ways in the same page. It is therefore not uncommon to find the name of this city written Karnáttah, Karrandtah, Gharandtah, Agharnáttah, Aghrandtah, in the course of two or three pages. In such cases I have made it a point to preserve as much as possible the orthography of the different authors, lest, by attempting uniformity, I should destroy the historical evidence.

From the word عرس 'arás, which, in Arabic, means a wedding, the Spaniards have made arras, viz., thirteen pieces of money which the bridgroom gives to the bride, as a pledge, in the act of marriage.

The word العروص as-sidák, which in the books of the Moriscos is written acidaque, means the dowry or sum of money assigned by a husband to his wife for her maintenance after his death, or in case of divorce. According to the ancient laws of Spain, which in this particular agreed with the Mohammedan code, the dowry granted to the wife could never exceed the tenth part of the husband's fortune.

From the word شتيل Shemil, which in older writers is written thus, شنييل Shingil, is the Singilia of the Romans; without plunging, as some authors have done, into an ocean of conjecture, and supposing that it means
The Roman name for Darro, one of the rivers of Granada, was Solon. It was still called so in the tenth century, since the Spanish translation of Ar-rází gives it no other name. In later times, however, it received that of Darro, which has been supposed to mean giving gold, quasi 'da! aurum,' owing to the gold which has for ages been found in its sands. The etymology may not be true; it is at least ingenious. According to Pedraza, the city of Granada, in 1520, presented the Emperor Charles V. with a crown made entirely of the gold collected in this river. (Pedraza, Antig. de Granada, p. 33; Lucio Marineo Sieulo, Descrip. de Granada.)

I find the name of this river written thus in Ibnu-l-khattíb, and Hadároh in more ancient writers, like Ibn Sáhibi-s-ealát. (Arab. MS. in the Bodl. Lib., Marsh. No. 433.) Might not the word Hadároh, from Hadár, which means the rapidity with which a swollen river comes down from the mountains, be the origin of the word Darro?

The traveIs of Abu 'Abdillah Mohammed Ibn 'Abdillah Al-lawáti Al-tanjí, known by the surname of Ibn Battúttah, have already been made known to the public by the extracts published in 1818 by Messrs. Apetz and Kosegarthen, and by the English translation of the epitome made by Professor Lee, of Cambridge, in 1829, and published under the auspices of the Oriental Translation Fund. This would have rendered any further notice of this famous traveller or his writings superflous, had it not a few years ago, and since the publication of the said translation, procured from Fez an ancient and beautifully written copy of the original travels, which I have almost entirely translated, and think of committing to the press.

It has long been thought, owing to a mistake of Mr. Burckhardt (see Travels in Nubia, p. 534), that Ibn Jazzi-1-kelbi had written an epitome of the travels of Ibn Battúttah, which epitome had been further abridged by an author named Mohammed Ibn Fat'h-allah Al-baylíní: at least such is the opinion entertained by the learned translator of his travels. (See The Travels of Ibn Batúta, London, 1829, Pref. p. x.) The last mentioned work being in reality an abridgement of a book written by Ibn Jazzi-1-kelbi, who himself was a distinct man from the traveller, it was naturally supposed that Ibn Jazzi-1-kelbi was only the epitomiser of the narrative of the traveller himself. But as this was nowhere to be found, and the supposed epitome itself was a book of the greatest rarity, the error was necessarily persevered in until we should find a copy of Ibn Jazzi's work. I now possess a very handsome copy of this MS., executed A.H. one thousand one hundred and thirty-nine (A.D. 1726-7). It is a large folio volume of about seven hundred closely-written pages, and contains twice as much matter as the epitome translated by Professor Lee, of Cambridge. The work is a narrative of the travels of Ibn Battúttah, not, indeed, written by himself,—for, like the famous traveller Marco Polo, he never sat down to commit to paper his own narrative,—but taken down from his dictation, and from his notes, by Mohammed Ibn Mohammed Ibn Ahmed Ibn Mohammed Ibn 'Abdillah Ibn Yahya Ibn Jazzi-l-khalī, a native of Granada, and who, according to Ibnu-l-khattīb, in his biography of illustrious men born in that city, died in seven hundred and fifty-eight (A.D. 1356-7).

Ibn Jazzi informs us in his preface that on the arrival of Ibn Battūttah at Fez, after returning from his travels in Sūdán, so much curiosity was excited at court that the Sultan himself wished to hear his adventures, and after listening to him for several consecutive nights, ordered that the whole should be drawn up, and, after the necessary revision by the traveller, made into a book.

I ought to state that among my manuscripts I possess one attributed to Ibn Battūttah (see Preface). It is a small quarto of about two hundred pages, containing a history of Morocco, with this title, "Aynu-l-admu'a, or 'Aynu-d-damā (the fountain of the tears), preserves to this day its Arabic name, corrupted into Dinamar or Adinamar. It is a pleasant and much frequented spot close to Granada. It was celebrated among Arabian historians and geographers, and is mentioned in many of the Morisco romances.

74 Instead of "Minhāj, I find in one of the copies of Minhāj. Mindhij, in the plural form. Hāji Khalifah, who gives the title of this work, and attributes it to Jemālu-d-dīn Mohammed Ibn Ibrāhīm Al-watāt (the bookseller) Al-warrāk (the paper merchant), who died in seven hundred and eighteen (A.D. 1318-9), writes it in the latter way, thus, Minhāj Mināhij for the mind, and places of recreation for the reason). It is also to be found inverted. See voc. Mandhij and Mabdhij.

76 From Iliberis, the name of a Roman town, situated at the foot of the mountain range of Sierra Nevada, about six miles from Granada, the Arabs made Al-beyrah or Elviru, which Marmol
NOTES AND ILLUSTRATIONS.

(Rebelion de los Moriscos, fo. 4, c. ii.) mistook for an Arabic word meaning 'a sterile and unfruitful country.'

77 It was not until the year four hundred and three of the Hijra, or thereabout, (A.D. 1012-3,) that the city of Granada acquired some importance. Before that time it is occasionally mentioned by Arabian historians, but always as a dependency of Elvira (Iliberis). During the civil wars between the Berbers and the Arabs, Záwí Ibn Zeyri Ibn Menád As-senhájí, an African chief, who held the government of the southern coast of Spain from Malaga to Almeria, declared himself independent, and transferred the seat of his empire from Elvira to Granada. Little by little the whole population migrated, so that when Ibn-u-l-khattib wrote, (A.H. 770,) Iliberis had dwindled into an insignificant village, and Granada risen to be a magnificent capital.

Marmol attributes the foundation of this caseba or citadel, which in his days was still called kasdbah jndidah or alcababa nueva, to his successor, Habús. See Reb. de los Mor. fo. 5.

78 Bádis was not the son of Záwí As-senhájí, as here stated, for that prince left no sons, but was succeeded by his nephew Habús Ibn Mákesen, who, at his death in A.H. 429, was succeeded by his son Bádis. His name is sometimes written باديس, and at others باديس Bádis.

As the Arabian geographers and historians often do nothing more than copy each other without the least criticism, the mistake here made by Al-makkarí, and which he no doubt copied from an Eastern writer not well versed in the history of Spain, has, probably from the same source, been adopted by several geographers. See Ibn-u-l-wardí (Arab. MS. in the Brit. Mus., No. 9590, fo. 15, verso), and the Ājāyibu-l-makhltíkát (Arab. MS. ib., No. 7504, fo. 24).

79 Sholayr is the name given by the Arabs to that chain of mountains called by the ancients Orospeda, (now Sierra Nevada,) and at the foot of which stood the Roman city of Iliberis. The range nearest to Granada is now called Sierra de Elvira.

The word Sholayr, written as above, conveys no meaning whatever in Arabic; but Pedraza, the Granadine antiquarian, with that characteristic aptness of his countrymen to distort the Arabic names of towns, rivers, and mountains, into a signification congenial with their theories, pretends that the word Sholayr is a compound of two Spanish words, sol and aire (sun and air), and that the mountains were so called by the Arabs, owing to their elevation! (Antig. de Granada, fo. 3, verso.) The Spanish translation of Ar-rázi says that the meaning of the word Sholayr is 'Monte de la elada' (the mountain of the snow). But, I repeat, the word Sholayr is not Arabic, and although it might be one of the many words introduced by the African settlers into the language of the Spanish Moors, I know of no Berber dialect in which the word Sholayr means 'snow.' Ibn-u-l-khattib, in the extracts given by Casiri (Bib. Ar. Hisp. Esc. vol. ii. p. 248), calls it جبل النحل شلير viz., 'the snowy mountains (called) Sholayr;' whence I infer that the word Sholayr could never mean snow. The point, however, is well worth the investigation of the antiquarian, as it may lead us to discover the origin of the modern denomination of the entire range—Sierra Nevada.

80 The word translated by 'watch-tower' is تلیث، a tower, or building, placed on an eminence, so as to command a great expanse of territory. From the plural تلیث the Spaniards made Atalaya.
Nejd is the high or mountainous part of Arabia, in opposition to Tehemeh, which means, on the contrary, the lower part. Hence, wherever they settled, the Arabs, who delighted in naming the spots they inhabited after those of their mother country, called a slightly undulating ground, like that in the neighbourhood of Granada, Nejd. This name was given to a particular district of great pleasantness in the territory round Granada. See Ibnu-l-khattib’s history of that city, apud Casiri, Bib. Ar. Hisp. Esc. vol. ii. p. 252.

Nazhûn. I was long uncertain whether the name of this poetess was to be written as above, or Tarhûn, as I find it constantly written in every copy of the present work; but having had recourse to Ibnu-l-khattib’s Biographical Dictionary, I not only found the name of this poetess written with a niun and a zayn, (Nazhûn,) but her biographical article classed among those of the poets whose names began with that letter. This decided me to adopt the former reading, especially as the transposition of one of the points was sufficient to produce that change.

"Nazhûn," says Ibnu-l-khattib, (loco laudato,) "was the daughter of Abû Bekr Al-ghosânî. She was better known by her patronymic Al-kal’aiyyeh or Al-kal’aiyyah: she was an eloquent poetess, well versed in history and literature, and flourished in the sixth century of the Hijra. Her principal merit consisted in the beauty of the similes which she used in her poems." See also Casiri (Bib. Ar. Hisp. Esc. vol. i. p. 102), who makes her a native of Seville.

Instead of Al-kal’aiyyah, B. reads Al-kal’aiyyah. Both are patronymics from Al-kal’ah (Alcalá la Real), near Granada. They might also be referred to the diminutive Al-koleyyah (Alcolea), in which case the patronymic ought to be pronounced Al-koleyyah.

Ibnu-l-khattih has no separate article respecting Zeynab in his Biographical Dictionary, but he speaks of her under that of her sister Hamdah, who was also a famous poetess. He says that they were the daughters of Zeyyâd the bookseller, (Al-muktib), and that they inhabited (Al-koleyyah) Widda-l-jammah (Al-kama?) near Bddî, in the district of Guadix. Ibnu-l-abbâr (Ar. MS. in the Nat. Lib. Mad., Gg. 12) says that both were good poetesses, besides being well versed in all the branches of literature; that they were very handsome, rich, amiable, and modest, only that their love of science threw them into the company of learned men: the author observes, however, that they associated with them with the greatest decency and composure, and without violating the strict rules of their sex.

Hafsah was the daughter of the Hájî (not Al-hejjáj, as in the text,) Ar-rakûnî. She was a native of Granada, and died at Morocco towards the end of five hundred and eighty, or the beginning of the ensuing year (A.D. 1184-5). Her life occurs in Ibnu-l-khattib’s Biographical Dictionary of illustrious Granadians. She is likewise mentioned by Ibnu-l-abbâr in his Tuhfatu-l-kâdim. See Casiri, Bib. Ar. Hisp. Esc. vol. i. p. 102.

Abû Ja’far Ahmed Ibn Sa’îd was the son of Abû Merwân ‘Abdu-l-mâlik Ibn Sa’îd, Lord of Kal’at Sa’îd (now Alcalá la Real), between Cordova and Granada, and the grandfather of Abû-l-hasan Ibn
NOTES AND ILLUSTRATIONS.

Sa‘íd, the author of the Muglírib. He was Wizír to Abú Sa‘íd Ibn ʾAbdi-l-múmen, ruler of Granada. His life will be given at length in another part of the present work.

The third verse is altogether wanting in Al-makkarí. I have supplied it from my copy of Ibnu-l-khattíb. The translation is as follows:

The last verse presents also a different reading, which considerably alters the meaning—

Maumal was a district in the meadow of Granada, so called from the name of Maumel or Maumal, an African, who was the Wizír of Bádis Ibn Habús, Sultán of Granada, and who, among other useful and ornamental works executed in that capital or its neighbourhood, made a public walk, planted with cypress trees, and called after him, جوز مومال جوز مومال, ʿthe cypress plantation of Maumal.’

Daũh is, according to Juḥárí, the name of certain large trees, for a description of which I have looked in vain in Ibnu-l-awam, Ibnu-l-beyttar, and other Arabian writers de re rustica.

Instead of Abú Merwán I think that Ibn Abí Merwán, i. e. the son of Abú Merwán, ought to be read, since there can be no doubt that Abú Jaʿfar is the individual intended.
NOTES AND ILLUSTRATIONS.

87. Loxa is a city fifteen miles east of Granada, the birth-place of the celebrated historian and Wizir whose life is the subject of Al-makkari’s work. Beghah is a large town in the same province. Casiri was strangely mistaken when he translated Beghah by the Vega de Granada. See Bib. Ar. Hisp. Esc. vol. ii. p. 253.

Beghah was a town not far from Jaen, on the road to Granada. Ibn Iyás describes it in the following words:—“Beghah,” he says, “is a handsome city, abounding in running waters, and full of gardens and orchards, where the olive tree and the vine thrive in a wonderful manner. Its territory, which is excessively fertile, is comprised within the limits of the province of Jaen.” This statement is confirmed by Yákút in his Geographical Dictionary, (Ar. MS. in the Bodl. Lib., Oxford, No. 909, voc. Beghah.) Idrísí, in his Geography, calls it Beghah; he places it at a short march from Al-ghaydék or Al-ghaydék, (Alcaudete?) in the district of Jaen.

88. Wāda-l-eshat or Wāda-l-eshet. It is now called the river of Guadix, a corruption from Wāda (river), and Acci (the name of the town under the Romans). Marmol was wrong in supposing that the word Guadix meant ‘the river of life.’ See Rebellion de los Moriscos, Malaga, 1600, book iv. fo. 87, verso.

89. Abú-l-hasan Ibn Naṣr was a poet, born at Guadix in five hundred and seventy-two (A.D. 1176-7). He resided in Granada, where he held command under the Almohades. See Ibnu-l-khattíb’s history of Granada.

90. The territory about Guadix was and is still famous for its medicinal plants. Ibnu-l-hayttar, who alludes to it often in his Botanical Dictionary, says that it was much frequented by physicians and naturalists in his days. Long after the expulsion of the Moors from Spain it continued still to be the scene of their rambles. As late as the end of the last century one of these wandering physicians, a native of Fez, used to come regularly every year, during the summer season, and, after herbarizing for about a fortnight in the neighbouring mountains, return to Africa with a plentiful supply of plants.

91. Hiṣn Jaliánah. This seems to be the same village which Marmol Carvajal mentions as still existing in his time under the name of Julina. It then belonged to the Taa or district of Luchar. (See Rebellion de los Moriscos, p. 81.) I ought to observe that the word Taa, meaning a district or jurisdictional territory of a city, is Arabic, and comes from مُنْطَقَة tā‘î, which means ‘obedience.’ The word كَرِيَّة Kariah, too, which I have translated by village, has been preserved in the Spanish Alquería, which means a hamlet, and more properly a cluster of agricultural buildings or farm-houses. There is a province in Spain still called Alcarria, since the time of the Arabs, owing to the great number of farm-houses that were scattered over its surface.

Ibnu Jazzí-l-kelbi is here called the editor of Ibn Battáttah's travels. The life of this writer occurs in my copy of Ibnu-l-khattíb's history. His entire name was Abú-l-kásim Mohammed Ibn Ahmed Ibn Mohammed Ibn 'Abdillah Ibn Yahya Ibn 'Abdi-r-rahmán Ibn Yusuf Ibn Jazzí-l-kelbi. He was a native of Granada, but his family were originally from Huelma, a village in the Alpuxarras. Ibnu Jazzí died in seven hundred and forty-one (A.D. 1340-1).

A son of his, named Ahmed, was still living, according to Ibnu-l-khattíb (loco laudato), in seven hundred and sixty-three (A.D. 1361-2), filling the duties of Kádí of the principal mosque at Granada, and preacher at that of the royal palace of the Al-hamrah in that city.

Al-busherah, that is, place of pasturage, from busherah, which means 'grass;' at least such appears to be the probable etymology of this word, which Marmol Carvajal thought to mean 'the quarrelsome' (I suppose), because, says that author, long after the conquest of Spain by the Arabs, the Christians held out a long time in the mountain passes for which that district is famous. (Rebel. de los Mor. p. 16.) Pedraza, the Granadian antiquarian, with his usual perspicuity, says that the Alpuxarras were so called from Abraham Abuxarra, one of Taríf's officers, who subdued them! I need not show the extravagance of such etymology, which Pedraza borrowed from that amusing romance, La perdida de España, ed. of Valencia, 1646, p. 54. See Hist. Ecles. p. 89.

Al-munækab, or rather Al-mankab, is the plural of Mankabah, which means a 'gorge, a pass in the mountains,'—an etymology which agrees well with the situation of that town,—without plunging, like Conde, into an ocean of conjectures, and supposing the word Almuñecar to be a corruption of Al-muneckab, which that author pretends means a garrison town, forgetting that the Arabs never prefix the adjective to the substantive. (Geog. del Nub. p. 224.) The author of the Audhahu-l-mesdlek (fo. 157, verso) writes it thus, Al-munnekab, which accounts for the Spaniards adopting the letter ñ in the pronunciation of that word. It was there that 'Abdu-r-rahmán I. landed from Africa when he came to the conquest of Spain. Almuñécar is the same town which the Roman geographers designate often by the names of Esi, Firmum Julium Sexi, Municipium Esiitanum.

I have already observed (see Note 69) that, owing to the system adopted by Al-makkari in writing history, namely, transcribing the narrative of writers of various ages and countries, there must be considerable difference in the mode of spelling. For instance, the word Toletalah, which at times is written thus, Toleytolah, or rather Toletolah, as the Arabs pronounced it. The same word is written Toleytilah by the author of the 'Ajdýibu-l-makklikdt, 'the wonders of the creation' (Arab. MS. in the Brit. Mus., No. 7504, fo. 26, verso).

The family of the Dhi-l-nún, or rather Dhi-n-nún, occupied the throne of Toledo from A.H. four hundred and seven to four hundred and seventy-eight (A.D. 1016 to 1085). Al-makkari was therefore wrong in saying the sixth instead of the fifth century.

It is not easy to guess what the author means by the word زاليتة, (Drupalة Dhaleytah in another copy,) which he translates into Arabic by 'أنت فارخ,' thou art content,' especially as, the word not being pointed, it is impossible to say how it is to be pronounced. If the word be spelt as I have written it, it may perhaps be meant for the Latin word delectas; if, however, the first letter has a dhamma, thus—dhaleyta, it may easily be converted into tu lata or tu latus, which is a close translation of ena farihan. The author of the Andhahus-ı-mendlek says that dhaleyta or dhaleyta mean 'أنت فارخ,' thou art finishing or ending;' but as the copyist may easily have mistaken the خ for خ I believe the former reading to be the right one. Of all people in the world the Arabs are the most fond of giving sense to foreign words. It is a propensity in which Spanish historians have also most freely indulged. The Kitabu-I-ja'rifyah (Arab. MS. in my possession) says that Toledo was founded by the Carthaginians, 'أعلمهم كمالك أو بالمدكت,' as the Arabs called them, loco laudato, p. 25, verso.

The author of these verses, 'Abbás Ibn Firnás, was a general of Mohammed I., son of 'Abd-ul-rahaman II., Sultan of Cordova. After a siege of six years, Mohammed took the city of Toledo (A.D. 859) from the rebels who, since his father's time, had strengthened themselves in it. See Conde, Hist. de la Dom. vol. i. p. 291.

The last hemistich of the last verse, which I have translated by 'through which the inhabitants held communication with the infidels,' might also be translated 'which served for the passage of the Christian troops,' for the word كاتيب, plural of katibah, means 'letters,' and 'bodies of cavalry;' and it is not unlikely that the inhabitants of Toledo sought and obtained the assistance of the Christians on this occasion. The verb نصبت too, seems to imply that a bridge of light materials had been thrown across the river for that purpose.

I find this second verse differently written in a collection of poems formed by 'Ala Ibn Mohammed Ibn Khâled Al-belânisî, entitled Nashatu-I-aba'îd wa bahjatu-I-afkîr. It stands thus:

'God has ornamented it, and given it the walls for a girdle, (while) the river is the milky way, 'and the branches of the trees (on its banks) look like the stars.'
Immediately after these verses there follow, in the principal manuscript, several odes, and other poetical compositions, of usual length, touching more or less upon Spain, and praising in general terms its mild temperature, salubrious air, natural productions, fertility of the soil, &c. As the reader could not derive much information from the translation of these poems, some of which occupy many closely-written pages in the original, and have but a slight connexion with the main object of this work, I have thought myself authorized to suppress them, taking care to give here the names of their authors, with such accounts of them and their works as I have been able to collect elsewhere.

Abú l'shák Ibn Khafājah, a poet of the fifth century, and whose life has been given by Al-fat'h, both in his Kaláyid, fo. 71, and in his Mattmahu-l-anfus, fo. 174, verso; Ibnu-l-khattíb (see Note 11, p. 306); 'Abdu-l-málık Ar-ro'ayní, Ibnu Sa'id, father and son (see Note 1, p. 309), &c. There is also a very long epistle, full of rhetorical beauties, containing a poetical description of some of the Spanish cities, addressed to 'Abdu-r-rahmán, son of the Sultan Yúsuf, and grandson of 'Abdu-l-múmen. The author is Abú Bahr Sefwán Ibn Idrís. See Casiri, Bib. Ar. Hisp. Esc. vol. ii. pp. 97, 598.

101 Kal'at-Rabáh (the castle of Rabáh), which Conde (see notes to the description of Spain by the geographer Idrísí, fo. 211) translated by ' a capacious or roomy castle,' was so called from the name of its founder 'Ali Ibn Rabáh Al-lakhmí, an illustrious Arab, who is supposed by some to have been one of the followers of the Prophet who entered Spain with Músa.

102 It appears evident that Malaga and the surrounding districts were called by the Arabian settlers ُرِيَايَة Rayya, from the name of a city and province in Persia called رِيَايَة Rayya, much in the same manner as Jaen was called Kennesrin; Seville, Hemis (Enness); Granada, Shám (Damascus); Murcia, Misr, &c., after similar cities in the East. Rayya is the name of a district of Persia, whence, according to Ar-rúţí, who was originally from it, numerous settlers came to Spain, who, at the division of the lands among the Arabs, obtained for their share the country round Malaga. Adh-dhóbbi, in his Bigh'ayatu-l-multamis (Arab. MS. in the Nat. Lib. Mad., Gg. 14, p. 160), says that part of the territory of Malaga was peopled by settlers from Al-urdán (Jordan), who gave it the name of their country, and called it Al-urdán. However, although Malaga and its territory may have been called Rayya, there must have been besides in the neighbourhood of that city another town, perhaps founded by the same settlers, and which received also from them the name of Rayya, for Casiri (Bib. Ar. Hisp. Esc. vol. ii. p. 103), in translating an article from Ibnu-l-khattíb, speaks of a town called Raya, belonging to the district of Archidona (Kap-χαρδάν). This I believe stood on the site now occupied by the hamlet of Zafarraya, (the fields of Rayya?) eighteen miles from Archidona and twenty-five from Malaga, unless it be the town of Arrayate; which is at a few miles from the former city. Conde was wrong in supposing that Raya was Rute. See notes to Idrísí, p. 187.

103 All the copies read البیش but I know of no place on the coast of Malaga answering this description. Perhaps بلش or بلش Velez, twelve miles east of Malaga, is meant. Al-bekri (loco laudato, fo. 63) speaks of a sea-port called بلش or بلش, which stood opposite to Malaga on the African coast, and settlers from which founded in all probability the Spanish town.

104 One of the signs of royalty among the Arabs, Abú Zeyd Ibn Khalddn says, consisted in having their names and surnames woven into the skirt of their robes. Rich men were also allowed to use stuffs into which were woven passages of the Korán, or some favourite prayers. The stuffs thus prepared were called

تِرْذَة, a word meaning the skirt of a robe, and from which the Spaniards have derived

تِراز, which signifies the edge of cloth. Upon the تِرْذَة, and the use made of it by the Arabs, the reader may consult De Sacy’s Chrest. Arab. vol. ii. p. 287, where he has given a translation of the passage of Ibn Khalldún concerning this and other signs of royalty among the Arabs.

The first hemistich is differently written in some copies.

107 رطل, ро retl is a pound of twelve ounces. The old Spanish words ро retl and арелде are derived from it. The word ро redal, a remnant of cloth, seems to have the same origin.

108 The Arabs call Canopus صوْحَل. It is not improbable that in the mountains of Ronda, which are a continuations of the Sierra Nevada, and some of which have an elevation of nine thousand feet above the surface of the sea, that constellation may be visible.

109 ينسل is the present city of Velez-Malaga. I think it was so called to distinguish it from another town also called Beleash, which Al-belkri places on the coast of Africa, opposite to the former. See Note 103, p. 356.

109 Nerja, which in the sixteenth century was called نَرِيجا, (see Marmol, loco laudato, fo. 68,) is a sea-port between Velez and Almuñécar.

110 Al-hamah derives its name from the hot springs in the neighbourhood; Al-hamah, in Arabic, meaning ‘hot springs’ or ‘thermes.’ There is another town of the same name in the district of Almeria on the banks of the river Gergal, which is called Al-hama la seca (the dry) to distinguish it from the former.

112 Kheyrán was a Sclovonian eunuch and confidential servant of the famous Al-mansúr Ibn Abí ‘Amír, who, in reward for his services, conferred on him the government of the province of Almería. On the death of his master, and during the civil wars that arose between the Africans and the Spanish Arabs, Kheyrán naturally embraced the party of the Sultáns of the family of Umeyyah, and, like the other generals of Al-mansúr, proclaimed himself independent in his government. He seems, however, not to have assumed the title of king, but to have contented himself with that of Hójib or prime minister, for, like the other rebels, he pretended to administer his possessions in the absence only of the legitimate sovereign of the house of Umeyyah. See Conde, Hist. de la Dom. vol. i. pp. 593, 599, et seq. and vol. ii. p. 10. See also Casiri, Bib. Ar. Hisp. Esc. vol. ii. p. 206, c. 2, et passim.
There is a small river, or rather a mountain torrent, at Berja, which discharges its waters into the river of Adra, eight or nine miles before reaching the sea.

Dock-yard in Arabic is دار صنعة, that is, 'house of construction,' a name which the Spanish Arabs applied not only to the dock-yards where ships were built or careened, but also to the magazines where weapons and other warlike implements were either manufactured or stored. From دار صنعة the Spaniards have since made the word atarazana, which conveys the same meaning. The same word was further corrupted into درسنا (a place in a harbour to repair ships), and ارسنال (a dock-yard), which has also passed into French and Italian. There are still in some of the sea-ports of Spain buildings of this kind constructed by the Arabs, or erected by the Christians on their model, as the atarazanas of Malaga, Seville, Barcelona, Tarragona, &c.

Almeria was, during the empire of the Beni Umeyyah, the principal dock-yard on the coast of the Mediterranean. See Appendix B. at the end of this volume, where the reader will find, in a passage translated from Abú Zeyd Ibn Khaldún, much that is interesting upon the navy and maritime forces of the western Arabs.

dibaj is a generic word for all sorts of silk-stuff dyed of various colours. The Spaniards have made from it the words dibujo and dibujar, which mean 'a drawing' and 'to draw.'

The meaning of the word tiráz has already been explained. Both Ibnu-l-wardí (loco laudato, fo. 15, verso) and the author of the 'Ajáyibu-l-makhlúkát (fo. 24, verso) praise the city of Almeria for its manufactures of these royal dresses.

حُول, or rather حول, the plural of حليل, means a species of silk robe worked in stripes.

A. reads استقلتون; B. more correctly استقلتون, which means scarlet. That word seems to be the origin of the word scarlatum, which, according to Ducange (see Gloss. vol. vi. p. 202), was used in Low Latin. Spanish, escarlata; French, écarlate; Italian, scarlátto.

Instead of أتلي, or 'Italí, the principal MS. reads أتلي, but I believe the former to be the correct reading, for I find in Ibn Bashkúwál that there was in Baghdád a street called أتليب in which there were several manufactures of silk-stuffs, and it is likely that these were thus denominated from the spot of their fabrication.

The author of the 'Ajáyibu-l-makhlúkát (fo. 24, verso) adds that there were at Almeria fabrics of candied fruits, of which a considerable exportation took place every year for the ports of Africa and Egypt; he adds also that at one time the number of baths and inns, fondák, (Italian, fondaco, Spanish, fonda,) amounted to one thousand, including only in this number those that had shutting doors مغلق.

Abú Ja'far Ibn Khatimah (but more correctly ختیمعل) is the author of a history of Almeria, which is often quoted by Ibnu-l-khattib in his Kita'ib-l-aháttatī fi táríkhī Gharrādītī (Arab. MS. in my possession), and the title of which is as follows: النهضة الباهية على غيرها من البلاد الإندلسية (advantages of Almeria over the other districts of Andalus).
